

Concord grape juice can be made into wine. Commercial 100% Concord grape juice (like Welch's Concord Grape Juice) contains enough natural sugar and a favorable acid balance to ferment, though you typically need to add extra sugar and wine yeast to reach a standard alcohol level. Key Steps to Make Concord Grape Juice Wine

- Check the label: Use 100% juice with no chemical preservatives (like potassium sorbate) that stop yeast from working. Ascorbic acid or citric acid are fine.  YouTube · The Home Wine...
- Add sugar: Juice alone yields a low alcohol level, so homebrewers mix in extra sugar to raise the potential alcohol (ABV) to 10%–13%.  YouTube · The Home Wi... +1
- Pitch yeast: Add a dedicated wine yeast (or champagne yeast) rather than bread yeast for a cleaner taste.  Instructables +1
- Manage flavor: Concord wine has a very distinct, fruity "foxy" profile and can lack tannins. Some makers blend in red grape juice or add black tea to add structure and tannin dryness.  Reddit · r/winemaking +2
- Ferment and age: Allow primary fermentation in a bucket with an airlock or gas escape valve for a few weeks, then rack into a secondary container to clear and age.  TikTok · craftabrew +1

If you'd like a step-by-step recipe, let me know:

- How much volume you want to make (1 gallon vs. 5 gallons)
- Whether you have basic brewing equipment (airlocks, carboys) or want a simple method

If you want a specific recipe, tell me your target batch size and equipment level.
